The dark art of image manipulation continues to evolve with more powerful image editing programs becoming available and with them more user-friendly features. Image-editing programs can be pricey, but they're well worth the investment if you want to be a serious Photoshop user. It will get you started on the road to a career in graphic design or web design. You'll also be able to do text-intensive edits and improve your general skills in areas like composition, organization, and color correcting. What You Need The following tools, equipment, and software are all you need to master the art of Photoshop: Computer with a flat screen. A higher-end computer (one with a DVD-ROM drive) is recommended. Mouse or trackpad (mouse might be a bit easier to manipulate a large image). Your image-editing software of choice, including an.ai (Adobe Illustrator) or.eps (PostScript) format file of your best image. The.ai format is Adobe Illustrator, which, if you've never used it, is a vector editing program, and the.eps format is PostScript, which is used to print documents and can be a printer driver for desktop publishing. A printer that is compatible with the file format you prefer. A computer-coffee-cup holder. (Actually, it would be nice if you have your own personal image editor that you carry around.) Even a basic course in Photoshop is recommended. The following books help you get started: Photoshop Elements 8 All-in-One For Dummies (Wiley) by Lori Strong. It's a clear, complete, step-by-step book that shows you how to do everything you can think of, from opening a file to printing, to adjusting the photos. The most important thing is that you get the basic skills down to enable you to understand and use the features with confidence. Mastering Photoshop CS6 All-in-One For Dummies (Wiley) by Nicholas C. Zakas and Samara Schneider. It gives you a complete step-by-step guide to using all the features of Photoshop on a relatively large file. It's good for when you have Photoshop CS6 and are learning to use the new tools and are getting bored with what you've already learned. Drawing with a Camera (For Dummies) by Samara Schneider. This book helps you become an artist, even if you've never

What's New in the Adobe Photoshop CC 2014?

With the world's population set to reach 9.2 billion people by 2050, the United Nations estimates that demand for food by the year 2050 will rise by an alarming 50 percent. Experts say that this is a critical opportunity for market-based solutions and private agro-technology to address the threats of ongoing global food insecurity, pest resistance, inefficient land usage and rising input costs. In South Africa, the Department of Agriculture, Forestry and Fisheries (DAFF) is currently working with the South African food science and technology industry to understand and solve this global issue. With South Africa's rapidly growing population at a country-wide stand-still, the latest meeting of the South African Food and Biotechnology Council, held last week at the World Congress on Technology in Food, Agriculture and Nutrition in Cape Town, was a resounding success. Speaking after the success of the South African Food and Biotechnology Council (SAFBC) meeting in a teaming ceremony held at the World Congress on Technology in Food, Agriculture and Nutrition held in Cape Town, the council convenor, Dr Lenette Retief, announced that the election of the industry and government of South Africa to partner the Food and Agricultural Organization (FAO) in the Integrated Pest Management (IPM) project to assist developing countries in tackling pest outbreaks on food crops will ensure that South Africa continues to forge ahead with its food science and technology leadership. The South African food and biotechnology industry has come of age. An estimated 77% of South Africans are consumers of food; this includes 65% of Africans, 62% of Africans by nation and 57% of South Africans by province.<sup>1</sup> These figures emphasise the importance of the regional South African food industry, especially the agricultural trade in South Africa, which accounts for around 7% of the regional economy of South Africa.<sup>2</sup> A watershed moment has been reached in the food science and technology sector of South Africa as a milestone has been reached in the industry with the recent appointment of the newly elected as executive director of the South African Food and Biotechnology Council (SAFBC). The South African food and biotechnology industry is today one of the fastest growing sectors of our economy, with an estimated total trade turnover of US$5bn, and supported by the United States Agency for International Development (USAID) and other donors. This sector employs directly an estimated 100,000 South Africans and is expected to grow further. The latest Safbc meeting, held last week
