This study characterized sex differences in the pharmacokinetics of oxcarbazepine (OXC), a candidate drug for the treatment of partial seizures, in rats. Rats were orally dosed with OXC at a dose of 100 mg/kg, and blood samples were collected at timed intervals for up to 48 h. OXC concentrations in the plasma were determined by HPLC. Pharmacokinetic parameters in each sex were compared. There was no significant difference between male and female rats in plasma OXC concentrations up to 12 h after dosing. However, the plasma concentrations of OXC were significantly higher in male than in female rats 24-48 h after dosing. The apparent oral clearance and the area under the plasma concentration-time curve (AUC) of OXC were significantly higher in female than in male rats. The OXC plasma clearance and the AUC of OXC was greater in male than in female rats after oral administration of a single dose of OXC at 100 mg/kg. This sex difference in the pharmacokinetics of OXC in rats was discussed in terms of pharmacogenetics.Some of the links on this site are affiliate links. When I have a new article out, I usually read reviews that came in the following weeks, and when I come across a particularly negative review I ask myself why. Was it an isolated incident? Was it triggered by the author encountering e79caf774b
