The first Mordhau game, made by the same authors as "Risen", will bring the very first gifts of steam-powered guns and giant cannons. The title of the first game, Mordhau, means Lion in German. A basic combat mode, the Lion System is quite innovative with a focused scope on strategy. Conquerors can be called upon to have a decisive role in the battle, while lesser and more restricted units are immaterial. These units can be placed at strategic points on the map, whether in the sky, river or forests. The player can deploy one or multiple units to attack, defend or observe. But this freedom in deployment is also a source of weakness, since the battle consists of a large number of fights, which are played at the same time, and the action is not coordinated. The battle mode is based on the battle-by-turn method, linked to a dynamic timing of the actions. Each player has his turn. Attack, defend or enter the territory of the opponent, and then return to yours. The player who has the most hits wins. A particular attention is given to the slots that are configured to respond to the attacks and defend enemies. These slots can be filled by various troops. The defender can call upon specialists, standard troops or units with a specific function. "The Lion Set" is a full lineup of customization. The armor of the Lion includes a variety of standard ensembles available in the kits, as well as the base components to create your own versions. A basic outfit that includes the gold buckle, burgonet, pauldrons, the neck of the lion, the halberd, and the skulled gauntlets may not require any customization. A base army configuration, which includes the lion's head, and a power meter of 15 points may require no customization. A unique version, where the helm may be placed and the burgonet removed, which will include the power meter of 50 points, may require a minimum of 10 customization points. It may include three standard kits, an available customization choice. A unique version that excludes the burgonet, which will include a power meter of 70 points, may require a minimum of 20 customization points. It may include three standard kits and a choice of customization. To enjoy the most of the gameplay, players must be able to customize the weapons and even the loadout of the troops. The kits define a standard configuration of the parts of the kit at the two interface slots and a minimum of 10 customization points

Dowell also has one of the finest Christmas Carols to be found anywhere? It may be, and you can have a download of this Wargamer's best! In the whole Wide World There's nothing like Christmas With Graham Dowell Written by Kim Parker and Performed by Graham Dowell. He knows his Christmas Carols He knows his songs All right, he really knows his choirs (Repeat) Notes. I've had this version of the song, but it was originally recorded by Mel Torme! I've worked it a bit, but it is in the public domain through the generosity of Kim Parker who included it in one of the three CDs she made available for this campaign. Base Score. The 4th Corps (blue) should win a tiebreaker - they score 45 points while the Guards (gray) score 48. But they tie at 45, so both (pink) halves score 13 points! (The Author and Wargamer would thus like to submit a recommendation to Ken Moore). The Author and Wargamer is no good at estimating strengths and weaknesses in 1940. See our page here for further discussion of the strengths and weaknesses of the armies! The author would like to thank Ben Rogers for helping to confirm some of the information on musicians used in the song. The album cover image on this article was taken from I's album, "Rudolf the Red Nosed Russian Devil": Many men are taking a cue from a movie star who's likely to forever be linked with love and tragedy: Gene Wilder. According to a new study, the bespectacled and besuited St. Louis native may have made his most enduring mark in the art of...sex?
